

CITY OF THE FUTURE

Electricity Will Make Inconveniences and Difficulties

Editor of Electrical Review Drawn a Picture of What May Be Accomplished in No Distant Day.

In discussing the noiseless electrical city Charles W. Price, editor of the Electrical Review, says:

"In the ideal city distracting noises will be unknown and dirt and all unclean things will be kept without its pale. Electricity is the magician that can and assuredly will work the change."

"This admirable day may not be so far away. We move rapidly now. Twenty-five years ago there was no telephone, the electric light existed only in the laboratories of a few experimenters, and the electric motor, in the form of an ingenious toy, was looked upon as an ingenious little machine of no practical utility. The car, he jingled his bells on old streets, the automobile was still only a dream, and the carriage and draft horse monarch of our roadways.

"Electric power stations and electric light stations are being located farther and farther away from the city's heart; the horse car, the steam locomotive, the engine in the basement, the coal stove, are one and all being replaced by the quiet, clean and active electric motor, by the electric motive, and surely not slowly, by the electric heater.

"The citizen of New York may have his office cooled by his electric fan, lighted by this incandescent electric light, and heated, it may be, by electricity; and his electric telephone gives him communication with the country at large, and the same wire may carry his telegraph message simultaneously without interference with the spoken word, so skillfully has the magic art of the telephonist been used."

"Electricity will soon replace the steam locomotives on the elevated roads of this city, and it is believed will soon replace all steam locomotives entering Greater New York. The tunnel now being constructed under Great New York will owe its success in carrying passenger traffic and commerce, probably chiefly to that mighty transformer, the electric current."

"The rubber-tired electric motor is rapidly replacing the driven horse, and will replace him not only for driving but for heavy hauling purposes."

"The awe of the instant volume of smoke of his unnumbered thousands of iron-shod feet hammering resounding pavements will disappear forever, and with 80 per cent of the filth and odor of the street. With the passage of the horse will go also the stone pavements."
